New England Institute of Technology is the First University in the World to Use IDEALENS K2 VR Headset for Interactive Campus Tours

EAST GREENWICH, RI - New England Institute of Technology (NEIT) students demonstrated its IDEALENS K2 Virtual Reality (VR) headset at the recent PAX East gaming conference held in Boston on March 10-12, 2017. Currently NEIT is the first and only university in the world to use the headset for virtual campus tours and for student instruction, according to Henry Zhang, Overseas Market Manager for the headset producer IDEALSEE GROUP - IDEALENS VR.

The IDEALENS K2 offers Virtual Reality capabilities without wires or a phone and does not require any additional equipment. The headset has an onboard processor, graphics card and battery, providing wireless mobility and a built-in battery pack that lasts up to two hours. The IDEALENS also offers instantaneous over-the-head support that fits any head size or shape and weighs less than two-thirds of a pound. It provides 120-degree wide-angle Field of View, internal IMU sensor with gesture support, motion tracking and Wi-Fi connectivity.

The headset is powered by Samsung's Exynos 7420 processor coupled with 3GB RAM, 32GB internal storage with support for external expansion, 3.81-inch 2.5K AMOLED display, and 3,800mAh battery. Offering a staggering 770ppi, the IDEALENS K2 hits the industry benchmark of <17ms low latency and 90Hz high refresh rate.

During the PAX East gaming conference, NEIT students demonstrated how the IDEALENS K2 operates. Visitors were invited to take a virtual tour of the NEIT campus using this state-of-the-art headset. Attendees also had the opportunity to play video games designed by New England Tech students.

New England Institute of Technology offers 59 associate, bachelor's, master's and online degree programs some of which include Digital Media Production; Game Development and Simulation programming; Graphics, Multimedia and Web Design; Information Technology; and Video Game Design.
